Ne, a Particle or Adjunct of great uſe, grace and ornament in the Italian tongue, the true uſe whereof, I could yet never find ſet down, nor methodically deſcribed by any, which I find to have theſe enſuing ſignifications.

First, Ne, is ſometimes an Adverb of diſtinction, or (as ſome count it) of denial or reſuſal, and then it is commonly without a verb, and in the beginning of ſentences, ſignifying in Engliſh, Nor or Neither, and then ſhould it be accented, as in theſe examples, Ne ti ſono amico, ne ſanco lo voglio eſſere, perche ne tu lo meriti, ne ſi conviene, I am not thy friend, nor will I be, becauſe thou neither deſerv'ſt it, nor is it fitting; or otherwiſe, Ne queſto, ne quello ti concedo, imperochè, ne mi ami, ne mi puoi vedere, I'll grant thee neither this nor that, becauſe thou neither loveſt nor canſt endure to ſee me.

Ne, is ſecondly often an Adverb or Prepoſition local, or of place, but then muſt the Article I, be underſtood or implied, whether it be Apoſtrophed or no, ſignifying, in, or in the, or with, as for example, Spaggiando ne campi, m'incontrai ne miei amici, walking in the fields I met with my friends, or elſe Ne libri ſi legono molte coſe, in books many things are read, ne ſavii ſi trovano i buoni conſiglii, une vicii ſi perdono molti, &c. in wiſe-men are good counſels to be had, and in vices many miſcarrie.

Ne, thirdly, being joyned (as often it is) with any of theſe tranſitive verbs, or of motion, Andare, Fuggire, or elſe Venire, whether before or after, it ſerveth for an Adverb merely local or of place, ſignifying, hence, thence, or away, as for example, Io me ne vado a ſpaſſo, I go my wayſ hence abroad, volendocene egli andare, lui ſe ne è fuggito, he being about to be gone hence, he is fled hence, Io me ne venni via, I came my wayſ hence.

Ne, fourthly, doth moſt often and commonly ſerve, and ſtand in place of an Adverb of quantity, ſignifying in Engliſh, ſome, ſome of it, Thereof, of it, of them, part of any, none, not any, none of it, having ever relation, or reference to the chief ſub-mentioned ſpoken-of, or meant in the ſentence, as reciprocal unto it, and is moſt elegantly ſo often uſed, to avoid iteration of the ſaid principal Noun-subſtantive, as for example, Signor mio voi mi domandate denari (remember that Denari is the chief Noun ſpoken-of) Io non ne ho, ſe ne havessi, ve ne farei parte, quando ne havere, voi ne potrete diſporre, mi diſpiace non haverne, viſto che tanti altri ne hanno, che non ne ſono degni, Denari, is here mentioned but once, yet bath Ne eight times reference unto Denari, the Engliſh is, Sir, you demand money of me, I have none, had I any, I would impart ſome unto you, when I ſhall have any, you ſhall diſpoſe thereof, I am ſorry I have none, ſeeing ſo many others to have ſome that are not worthy of it, or of them.

Ne, fifthly, ſerveth often for the Pronoun-primitive, Noi, or Ci of the Dative or Accuſative Caſes, in Engliſh, to us, or elſe us, except it be with verbs of privation with which it becometh of the Ablative caſe, as for example, vedendone gliocare lui ne diede denari ſeving us all play he gave us money, Incontrandoci, lui ne diede il buon giorno, meeting us, he gave us the good-morrow, lui ne ha tolto il noſtro ripoſo, e rubatone i noſtri denari, he hath taken our reſt from us, and ſtole our money from us.

Ne, I find to have been once (by a good author,) uſed in a ſixth ſenſe, in lieu of the Latin vel, in Engliſh, or elſe, ſe gli occhi miei ti fur dolci ne cari, if mine eyes have been fair to thee, or elſe dear.
